age. With the high temperatures which prevail in this region in the summer the loss by evaporation will be much larger than it is at this time.

There seems to be but little doubt but that a large part of the loss shown by the measurements just taken is due to the fact that the water finds an outlet beneath the sheet piling. A proof of this is found in the excavation now being made by the contractors who are laying water pipes in the main court.

Men Run a Supper.

A novel supper was given last night by the masculine portion of the Plymouth Congregational church, which proved a pronounced success, judging by the attendance.

The supper, situated in the basement, consisted of tables were laden with every delicacy which a fertile imagination could invent or skillful device bring into existence.

Except the flowers were contributed by the feminine members of the church. These flowers were placed in vases upon the festal boards and served a fitting background to the efforts of the host.

The supper began at 8 o'clock and closed at 8. During this time a neat sum of money was realized for the benefit of the church choir, in whose behalf the affair had been planned.

The supper proved such a success that it is probable that another of similar character will be given during the winter. Those who had it in charge were W. T. Sullivan, C. M. Sherrill, H. M. McIntosh, H. M. Stokes, C. E. Stokes and C. H. Rieff.

Old Saying Revised.

In the days of our daddies when everything was sterling and honest, there was an old saying, that read "where there is a great deal of smoke there must be considerable fire." Nowadays, it should be revised to read like this—where there is most smoke there is least fire. If you took the trouble to blow away some of the thick smoke in the papers today you would probably see each of half a dozen concerns trying to start a fire under circumstances that are decidedly hard. The matches are damp, the kindling is wet, the coals are burned out, lifeless, stale. Under such circumstances they have to blow and blow and blow, while outside the smoky circle stand a thousand bargain-hungry pilgrims, shivering and waiting eagerly for the faintest semblance of a blaze. Our lamps are always bright. Our coals are always clear. Our fires are well tended, well fed, well watched. We are all the time serving up savory morsels of merchandise without any soot or smoke to people who have got tired of standing around waiting for somebody else's fire to burn. Today two choice Tid-bits—Men's finest worsted Ulsters $17.50 and Boy's finest Astrakhan Reefers three dollars and-a-half.
